Additional comments:

Alex provided very clear lecture and directions for the lab. At first, she checked if the students have the background knowledge of solenoids and right-hand rules. Then she explained how to apply the first right hand rule to find the direction of the force on a moving charge in a magnetic field. She also explained the second right hand rule to find the direction of the magnetic field of a solenoid. Her board drawings were exceptionally clear, and she took extra care to make sure that the drawings were visible to all students. She regularly checked in to see if students have questions.

The only suggestion I have for her is about creating opportunities to interact more with the students. She can try asking students short questions during the lecture, like – what do you think the magnetic field direction would be if the charge was negative, or if the current was clockwise? This type of interaction could help her find out if students are struggling with certain concepts.
